After Hours

hile America's adults have been signing up for health clubs and investing in leotards and Reeboks, its youth have been getting soft.

At least that's what the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sport concluded in a recent report. And the Ontario YMCA wants to do something about it

The YMCA has started a pilot youth sports program at Upland's Sycamore School. The weekly sessions stress non-competitive play and physical exercise.

Working mothers and fathers also benefit from the program because it operates on the school's early dismissal day from when school lets out at 1:15 p.m. to 3 p.m. For parents, that means not having to find a babysitter for those extra hours.

"That's just one more thing to worry about," said Dorethea Lesaout of the minimum day. Lesaout, a teacher herself in another district, has her third-grade daughter Morgan in the program.

She added that the $20 fee for the 10-week sessions is "cheap compared to a babysitter." For those who cannot afford the full price, financial aid is available.

Instead of sitting at home watching cartoons and soap operas in the afternoons, the 30 or so children — first through grade — are playing soccer, softball and doing aerobics to music.

Sue Smith, the YMCA's physical director, operates the program along with one supervisor for every 12 children participating.

If the program is a success at Sycamore, the YMCA's outreach program will spread to more schools in the Upland and Rancho Cucamonga school districts, Smith said.

"So far it looks real positive for next year," she said.

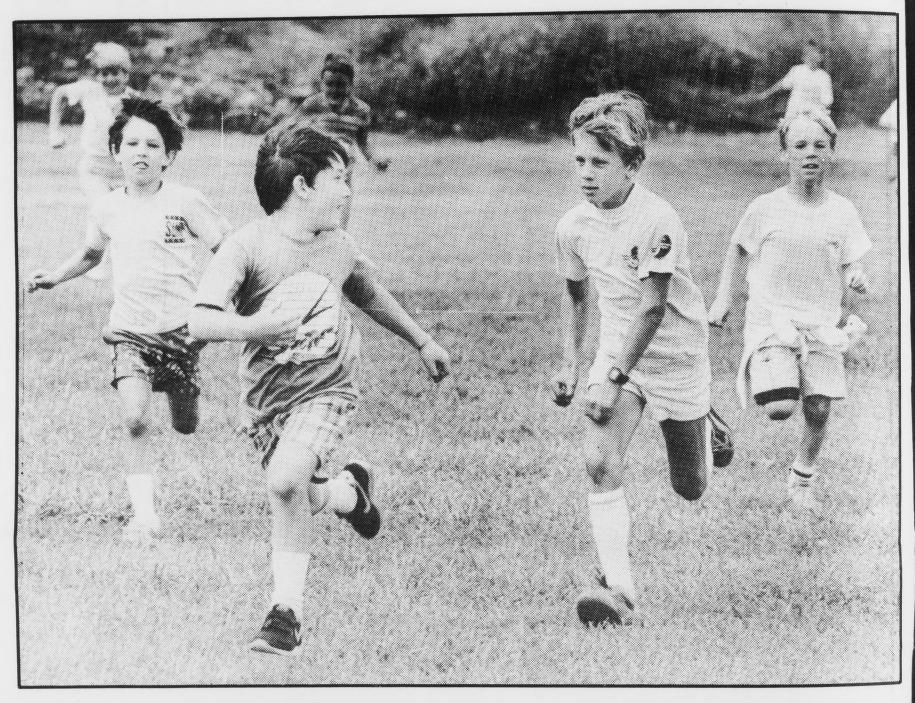

Smith concentrates on teaching the children skills and helping them build self-esteem, and tries to take the emphasis off competition. But she admits this is hard work.

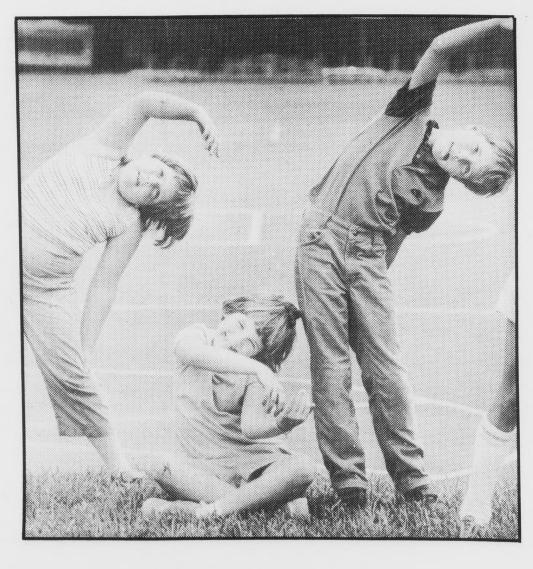

"It's difficult to take the competitiveness out of it just because it's part of human nature," she said. "But we would like to downplay that aspect."

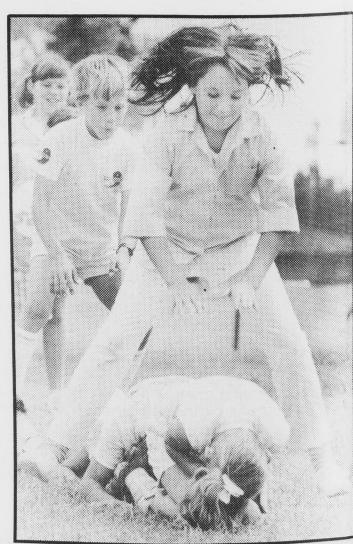

In the meantime, the youngsters are firming up their muscles, giving their cardiovascular systems a much-needed workout and having fun doing it.

That's how Lesaout looks at it for her daughter, anyway.

"She likes sports and she needs the exercise," she said. □

College jazz band to lose its director

By Marianne Aiken

When the Chaffey College Jazz Ensemble plays in Duncan, British Columbia, it can draw an audience of 250 people with two days' notice.

When the band plays in its own back yard, it's lucky to get

The award-winning band, with seven record albums and three overseas tours under its belt — including a stint at the prestigious Montreux, Switzerland, jazz festival — will travel to Europe this summer on a nine-city tour to play before more appreciative crowds.

After the band gets back home to Alta Loma July 15, its director will retire, and next year his job will be partially filled by hourly personnel and by shuffling around other contract faculty in the department.

"It's nice to have a reputation, but it stings just a little bit to realize that we aren't known in our own community," said jazz band director Jack Mason, who has been at Chaffey for 19 years.

Publicity has been a continuing problem, Mason said. Drastically lower numbers of high school graduates who want to be music majors, the difficulty of making a living as a musician, and lack of budgetary support have also contributed to the dwindling interest in the music program at Chaffey College.

"You can't fool these students," Mason said. "They know when something's not being supported. It's a downward spiral. You lose the students and there's less justification for the budget, and you lose more students."

Chaffey College was the first community college in the nation to offer a jazz major, starting in 1974.

The program attracted students from as far away as Canada, and in the heyday year of 1979-80, three bands were in full swing.

Mason said the first death knell came in 1982, when his assistant's position was cut — "arbitrarily, I might add" — in a round of other cuts at the college.

"When that happened, we immediately began losing students," Mason said.

He said he came to Chaffey College in 1967 with the idea of turning the music program around in three years.

"It didn't happen that way," he said.

Things have changed so much since then that a Pied

Jack Mason will take the award-winning Chaffey College Jazz Ensemble on the band's fourth European tour this summer. One of their nine stops will be Den Hague, Holland, where the band will play in the North Sea Jazz Festival. After the tour, Mason will retire.

Piper couldn't bring enough students to revive the jazz program, Mason said.

"For all intents and purposes, jazz is a dead profession," he said. "Now you can't make a living playing the horn any more. You could in the '70s."

Students are now going into more lucrative fields, taking computer and business courses in college, turning the music department into a humanities department, he said.

Ninety-five percent of the college's jazz musicians are not music majors.

"The only reason I would come up to this little college in the middle of the dirt and rock is I felt there was potential in the high schools," Mason said.

Back then, all nine high schools in the Chaffey College district had bands of more than 100 members, and 125 graduating seniors in the district went into instrumental music when they went on to college.

Now, Mason said, even though there are four more high schools in the district, only two high schools have bands with more than 100 members, and only 20 students a year graduate into a music program.

"That severely cramps the idea of recruiting," Mason said. There are so few students in the music program now, that Mason said he was too embarrassed to reveal the number.

"Very, very few," he said.
In defiance of Mason's pronouncement that jazz is dead, 21 people — including the roadies — will make the trip
June 26, starting off in London to practice at Trinity College, then playing at Ronnie Scott's Jazz Club, which Mason called
"the jazz club of the world."

Students will pay 35-40 percent of their own expenses, and the rest will be come from fund-raisers that took place earlier this year.

New crime victims' support group aids in emotional healing process

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Long after a rape or a burglary, many victims live with pain that neither medicine nor conviction can cure.

Carol Anderson, a victim/ witness advocate at the Ontario District Attorney's office, sees these victims every day.

"We kind of put a Bandaid on and send them to a counselor," she said.

But a new support group she and Alta Loma psychologist Steve Wysocki began this week provides more than bandages. Their goal is to have a group of about 10 crime victims meet once a week and discuss their feelings about what happened to them until they heal emotionally.

The DA's victim/witness program helps the victims with their legal problems and provides emergency counseling if they are willing to prosecute, but after that Anderson's hands are tied.

"I can't tell you how many victims come through here and ask, 'Isn't there anyone else who has been through what I have that I can talk to?" she said. "Right now, legally and morally, I cannot put victims together, but if they willingly join (the support group), then they can put themmelves together."

County seeks two state grants for pilot projects for children

By Patrick McGreevy

Local children suffering from mental strain and in need of day care centers will receive some help if the state approves two grants sought recently by the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors.

The county is applying for $34,800 to start a pilot project providing "mental health primary prevention" services to students in the Ontario-Montclair School

County officials are also applying for $341,000 for a pilot project to allow West Valley parents eligible to enroll their children in the Head Start program the option of enrolling their children in a private day care center instead.

The mental health program proposed for the fiscal year begining July 1, would involve a collaborative effort between workers with the West Valley region of the county Department of Mental Health and workers with the Ontario-Montclair School District, according to Bob Martinez, director of the county department.

In a written report to the county Board of Supervisors asking for authorization to apply for state funds, Martinez said the project would provide, "direct school-based services by paraprofessionals - Special Friends — to 150 students in kindergarten through the third grade enrolled at two district (elementary) schools — Cypress and Moreno."

"Students... identified through screening and referral as 'at risk' will receive weekly individual intervention aimed at improving their present school adjustment and preventing later, more serious problems," Martinez

The other program for which an application was submitted would be implemented in two Head Start service areas, including one that includes the city of Rancho Cucamonga, according to James Fare, the administrator of the county's human services agency.

In a report to the board April 28, Fare wrote that the county can apply for alternative programs in addition to the main Head Start program, which provides child development services in a preschool setting for low-income families.

The alternative program would allow parents eligible to enroll their children in a federallyfunded Head Start center to instead enroll them in other day care centers and have the cost paid for by the county program using the state grant, according to Hortense Hunn, the county's director of Head Start.

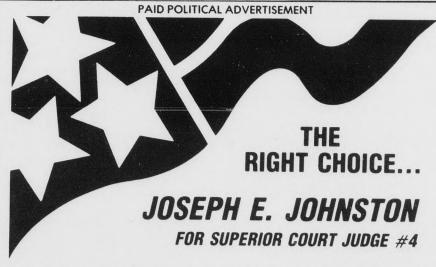

"It's a wider choice for parents who want child care services," Hunn said.

Rancho Cucamonga's seeking distinctive look to Foothill Blvd

By Marianne Aiken

Driving through the West Valley on historic Route 66, better known as Foothill Boulevard, it's hard to tell where one city ends and another one begins.

Next month, the first in a series of eight public workshops will be held in Rancho Cucamonga to help change all that.

How to let people know they're in Rancho Cucamonga and not Fontana or Upland when they're driving through the five-mile stretch of Foothill that runs through the city is the idea behind a specific plan that is expected to be completed next February.

"What we don't want is for Foothill Boulevard to be all the same," said city planner Brad Buller. "You might get a rhythm or sense of pattern."

Buller said he hopes the public workshops will help identify issues that should be covered in the specific plan.

"What it's going to look like exactly is what the plan is going to tell us," Buller said. "We're going to learn some things that maybe we haven't heard before."

The project will be broken down into four to six subareas to make it easier to identify the issues in different parts of the city that face the boulevard. Following that breakdown, five subarea committee meetings will be held in May, June and July.

The subarea meetings will be open to anyone who wants to attend, Buller said.

The Planning Commission will hold more public hearings on the plan beginning around December or January.

A consultant contract with Forma-Planning Network for the development of the Foothill Boulevard specific plan and environmental assessment was approved by the City Council March 20.

People reluctant to use smoke detectors

Douglas Garvin was asleep last November in his Montclair home when he was awakened by a loud beeping noise - his house was on fire. Garvin woke up his wife and three children and hurried them out of the house before it burned to the ground.

Annual dog licensing time here

Through the message, "Love Me ... License Me," the San Bernardino County Animal Control Services Program (ACS) wants to remind dog owners that its annual licensing campaign is scheduled from May 1 to July 31.

During this time, dog licensing clinics that provide low-cost rabies vaccination (dogs only) will be conducted countywide. These clinics are co-sponsored by ACS and the Orange Belt Veterinary Association.

Fees at the clinics are $15 for an animal license, with a $7.50 discount with proof of spay or neuter and $3 rabies vaccination (cash only).

Effective Feb. 26, the California rabies regulations were changed to require dogs vaccinated over the age of 12 months to be revaccinated every three years. In addition, dogs first vaccinated between ages of four and 12 months must be revaccinated one year later and then every three years.

All dogs over 4 months of age in the unincorporated areas around the cities of Ontario and Rancho Cucamonga are subject to annual licensing through the County Animal Control Services.

All current county dog licenses expire June 30, 1986, regardless of purchase date. After July 31, owners of unlicensed dogs face a late fee of $25 for all licenses and the possiblity of being cited for violating county and state health

The following rabies vaccination and licensing clinics have been scheduled:

• Tonight, Ayala Park, 18313 Valley Blvd., Bloomington, 3-7:30

For dogs that require only relicensing, owners may purchase the license through the mail, at a local clinic or at the local license purchasing office.

For more information, call (800) 472-5609.

"They all got out, and it was directly attributable to the smoke detector," said Fire Marshal Gary Turner of the Montclair Fire Department. "If (it) hadn't been there, they would have been overcome by smoke."

Smoke detectors: they're inexpensive (about $8), easy to install, and they save lives. "Smoke detectors have probably reduced fire deaths in singlefamily dwellings more than any other piece of fire equipment in the last 15 years," said Capt. Bill Alexander of the Ontario Fire Department.

So why don't more people have them? Despite a state law which requires all new homes in California to be built with smoke detectors, local fire officials say about half of the area's homes still are without the devices. Most of these residences, they say, are in older or low-income neighborhoods.

A woman and two young children died last December in an early-morning apartment fire on Holt Boulevard in Ontario. The apartment did not have a smoke detector.

And just a week ago Tuesday morning, a fire engulfed a modest home in Pomona, killing five people. "They would have walked out had a smoke detector been operating," said battalion chief John Hawthorne of the Pomona Fire Department.

Actor Dean Jones delivers word of God to breakfast

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Be open to God and he will put your life back together, was the message of actor Dean Jones at the Upland Mayor's Prayer Breakfast Monday.

Jones was the featured speaker at the sixth annual event, sponsored by the Chaplains Division of the Upland Police Department with the purpose of bringing citzens and city employees together

About 100 people filled the meeting room of the First Presbyterian Church in Upland for an early breakfast and Jones' speech.

The actor, who has frequently appeared in Walt Disney films like "The Love Bug" and "The Shaggy DA," praised city leaders for having the meeting.

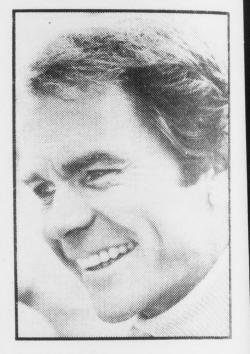

Comparing the gathering to the soul of the city, he explained that thoughts begin in a person's soul, are formulated in his mind and carried out by his body. A city works much the same way, he

Jones speaks often at gatherings in the United States and Europe about God and how his life was touched by him.

'You have to come alive spiritually and then God can pour into us," he said.

His own awakening happened in a hotel room in New Jersey, he said. He realized his life was in pieces and God helped him pull it back together.

"I said I need your help. I'm making $50,000 a week and I have a white pearly Ferrari and all the ladies of the chorus that I want and I'm miserable," he said.

"I was in a thousand pieces. My family was in a thousand pieces," he said.

Jones said he asked God for a sign and received one - a sense of inner peace.

"It didn't stay all the time," he said. "It was the worst year of my life. It didn't stay because hell was desperately trying to get me back.

Also on hand was Byron Spradlin of Alta Loma, who entertained the group with hymn arrangements requiring audience participation, including a rousing rendition of "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands.

Cucamonga teachers get pay hike in new contract

After three "very cordial" bargaining sessions, the Cucamonga School District has settled on a new contract that grants teachers a 6 percent pay

The increase, effective June 1, is part of a new salary schedule that will make the district the third-best paying of nine local school districts, according to Superintendent John Costello.

Teacher association representatives were unavailable for comment, but Costello said "now our top teacher at the maximum years service ... will earn $39,622."

Entry-level instructors will continue to earn $20,265, an amount that includes almost $3,000 in state supplements, Costello said.

Teachers affected by the pay increase typically have a bachelor of arts degree, some work toward a master's degree and two years experience.

National forest threatened, group say

By Andrew Horan

An unusual coalition of 10 environmental and sporting groups charged last week that "tremendous resource abuses" threaten to destroy the San Bernardino National Forest.

"Fundamentally, we all fear that the forest is being destroyed piece-by-piece for our special interests," explained Jim Matthews, conservation chairman of the Southern California Deerhunters.

Coalition members, including representatives of the Sierra Club. Audubon Society and Federation of Fly Fishers, first met in January to discuss alternatives to a proposed forest management plan they fear will damage wilderness and recreation areas.

The U.S. Forest Service will use the plan as a guide for managing 14 different uses. including recreation, transportation, mining and wilderness.

The forest service is encouraging public comment on the plan through July 24. Once a final plan is presented, it will guide foresters for the next 10 to 15 years, according to Richard Stauber, forest supervisor.

But coalition members charge that the forest service is underfunded now and will not have the budget to implement its proposed plan.

"The bottom line is this: No matter how good the plan may be, there is not the budget to properly implement the plan," Matthews, acting as coalition spokesman, said.

"Unless something is done about the budget, fish and wildlife will suffer, the environment will continue to be degraded, recreational opportunities will diminish and vast areas of the forest could be closed," he charged.

USFS will operate the San Bernadino National Forest on a $10.5 million budget in 1986, according to Stauber.

"We've had about a 30 percent budget reduction in the last five years," he said, "and a 38 percent reduction in recreation funding."

The management plan, he said, "does envision meeting an increasing demand for public recreation uses," but in light of federal deficits, "we would have to reduce our managment levels to meet the budget.'

Beyond budget woes, coalition members said elements of the proposed plan will heighten abuse of forest resources.

Members are most concerned by plans to construct a crossforest off-highway vehicle (OHV) trail. The 126-mile trail would begin at Baldy Mesa, just northeast of Wrightwood, and wander eastward to the desert.

"Off-road vehicles have the most negative impact on the forest of all other uses," Matthews claimed.

"I don't think any of us feel ORVs should be banned," he continued, "but their use is consumptive and should be confined."

Department's burglary-auto detail. A toll-free number from for OHV use, and another 900 miles of unpaved roads are open to off-roaders.

Both forestry officials and coalition members agree that problems arise from illegal OHV

Many OHV users simply leave designated trails and roads and ride through sensitive forest land, according to Bill Makel, USFS recreational specialist.

Those trips off the trails "damage sensitive environments," Matthews said.

"They are habitat poachers," he added. "They ruin it as certainly, as lawlessly, as a poacher's bullet at midnight."

Makel said the cross-forest trail would concentrate OHV use, making it easier for foresters to control illegal trips off the trails.

Joyce Burk, coalition chairwoman, said the group also wants USFS to add 45,000 acres to already-existing wilderness areas. The extra land would include extensive additions to the Cucamonga Wilderness area.

"Wilderness" designation requires that motorized vehicles be kept off the land while permitting recreational uses such as hiking and camping.

The forest service will hold a series of public meetings, including an open house at the Lytle Creek Ranger Station in Fontana May 28, before completing the plan.

Carbohydrate loading for energy

By Jack Williams Copley News Service

Prescribing optimal fuel for the endurance athlete has evolved from an experiment into a science. Test tubes have turned into training tables. Myths and fads have careened down garbage disposals. And, finally, truth has been served:

Carbohydrates are an exercising muscle's meat. From starch to finish.

But carbohydrate loading for endurance events suffers from gross malpractice and misunderstanding. It may suggest sinuous mounds of spaghetti, sloshed down by copious beers and accompanied by gobs of garlic bread on Ironman eve.

Yet, when practiced scientifically, it is more than that. And less.

So what, exactly, is carbohydrate loading? When should it be employed? And what are its effects?

One person who should know is Ellen Coleman, a 32-year-old marathoner, Ironman triathlete, exercise physiologist and registered dietitian who directs the Riverside Cardiac Fitness Center.

"When done properly," said Coleman, "carbohydrate loading can double or even triple your muscle glycogen level. And the higher your pre-exercise muscle glycogen, the greater your endurance potential."

That's not to say, however, that we should pig down two pounds of pasta primavera the night before a five-mile bike ride. Only if the endurance activity lasts about 90 minutes or more, says Coleman, is the loading procedure valuable.

The loading procedure encompasses six to seven days. It refers not to the amounts of food but to the source: a high percentage of complex, slow-toburn carbohydrates with a minimum of fats and protein and ample amounts of fluid. And it entails a reduction of training to enable the exercising muscles to store the energy-producing glycogen.

Indeed, what you eat the night before is not so important as what you've consumed and the amount of exercise you've done the week before.

Science, in fact, has proved wrong the original starve-andbinge concepts of the carbo load as it was introduced in 1967.

The revised plan - advanced six years ago by David Costill, Ph.D., of the Human Performance Laboratory at Ball State University, Muncie, Ind. also operates on a six-day cycle.

For the first three days, suggests Coleman, consume 50-60 percent of your diet in carbohydrates - which normally is recommended for endurancebased training. Remember, though, the plan is effective only if you taper your training. Coleman, a veteran of four marathons and eleven 200-mile bicycle races, suggests you reduce training from 90 minutes the first day to 40 the next two days.

"The 90 minutes of training lowers your glycogen stores and the 40 keeps 'em down a bit," she said. Then comes the relative deluge, given impetus by a reduction in training.

For the next three days, increase the carbohydrate load to 70 percent of your diet. Drop the training load to 20 minutes. Then, the day before the event, rest completely or simply warm up. (Experienced and elite athletes may prefer a light workout to stay loose and relaxed.)

"The night before," said Coleman, "is critical in making sure you have enough glycogen in your liver to maintain your blood sugar. But the pre-existing stores are established over several days as opposed to one specific meal."

If you follow the carbo-loading regimen to the letter, you'll probably gain two or three pounds of water weight - a temporary but, perhaps, undesirable side effect. For each gram of glycogen stored, about three grams of water are stored. That's a desirable side effect, a safeguard against dehydration.

"There may be a little stiffness and heaviness," conceded Coleman. "But that's not a bad feeling because you may go out slower and get faster and feel lighter as you go along. In a 10K, it would be a disaster. You don't need the additional glycogen stores for that distance, anyway." As for the half marathon (13.1 miles), if you're going to take at least 80 minutes to finish, Coleman suggests you might try what is known as a "loaf load." That, she said, "would probably ensure that you would run your best, everything else being equal."

In the loaf load you don't taper your training time but you do increase your carbohydrate consumption to 70 percent of your diet three days before and rest the day before. "You're not packing as much glycogen," said Coleman, "but you're ensuring that your stores are good for 90 minutes. Fat also can be utilized for energy but it takes 30-60 minutes of aerobic exercise for fat to be available as fuel in the form of free fatty acids, explained Coleman.

"Without carbo loading, marathoning (she has a best of 3 hours, 23 minutes) has been a disaster for me," she said. "I wouldn't have a chance of running 3:19 or better and qualifying for the Boston

You can collect early social security checks

By Leonard J. Hansen Copley News Service

Can you collect Social Security before you retire, even on a partial basis?

A Florida reader wrote us, "My brother-in-law claims he can file for Social Security now (at age 63), work full-time until age 65 and receive the last three months of 1986 and 1987 from Social Security before going on full retirement at age 65.

"Has there been some new kind of 'twist' or program established since I retired in 1980?"

It is a good question, and one with some surprising answers.

Yes, you may file for Social Security while still working and collect partially in your years of age 62, 63 and 64. It is not a new twist or program but, in fact, a provision that has been in place for years — and it works only if your working income is low.

When you file for Social Security and continue some form of work, Social Security benefits are reduced by $1 for each $2 earned above $5,760 per year for those under 65, or reduced at the same ratio for those 65 and over for income over $7,800 per year.

This means that a person age 62 to 65 with low income can file for Social Security, gaining a possible return. You would have to discuss this with a counselor at the Social Security office so that the financial evaluation can be accomplished.

The considerations will include your own income, the benefit level anticipated if you were to file for benefits, the income you have over the $5,760 figure and how much the reduction would be from the benefit level. You just might find some cash benefits available in this way.

At age 65 the Social Security Administration will recalculate your benefits to be paid forward, adjusted by the cash benefits already received.

Social Security recipients, age 70 and over, can earn any amount of income from work without reduction in monthly benefits. This is a fairly recent adjustment from the earlier qualification age of 72.

To the reader who sent the questions and to you readers where this early filing for lowerincome persons 62 and over might be a very real opportunity, we suggest you take your question and financial information directly to the nearest Social Security office. Don't jump and file until you see how it will all work on paper. Be concerned, too, about any downward adjustment in benefits from the level you would have received if filing at age 65. For some the concept might make great sense — for others it might produce a problem in later years.

Surgery or Alternative?

We have recommended in this column many times that you seek a second medical opinion whenever a doctor recommends surgery — unless it is an emergency situation where there is just not the time or opportunity to do so. You should have the benefit of added opinion — because doctors do make mistakes in diagnosis.

Now there is a book that gives you, in lay terms, the added information you need to know. "My Body — My Decision" presents in readily understandable text what you should know about the most common female surgeries. Each of the procedures is presented as a chapter, with sections including a definition of the disease or organs to be affected, abbreviations, common and technical names for the procedure, the functions of the body parts affected — and then what happens in the removal and after the removal, how common the surgery, a description of the procedure, the testing process (before, during and postoperative), advantages and disadvantages of the surgery, the type of anesthesia used, possible complications, the probable outcome from the surgery and post-operative concerns.

The book is a no-nonsense guide to the procedures and what they mean to your body — pro, con and otherwise — and presents its information for your knowledge and understanding in a far better fashion than we have ever seen accomplished in a doctor-to-patient relationship.

Unfortunately, the publisher does not have a similar book in the works for the common surgical procedures on men. We have called them to urge the development of such a volume.

"My Body — My Decision" is a 319-page paperback, published at $8.95 by The Body Press of HP Books Inc., P.O. Box 5367, Tucson, AZ 85703. You may order direct, adding $1.95 for postage and shipping. Or purchase the book at any Waldenbooks or B. Dalton bookstore.

Your body is your own concern and knowing about it and what will or can happen to it can be the start of your own very best medicine.

Daughter's career choice has her parents concerned

By Willard Abraham Copley News Service

Q. With all the careers that there are in this world, it infuriates me that our daughter seems to be choosing one that pays so little. No, it isn't teaching, although I would feel as bad about that as her real choice. Hers is social work, and I am just plain against it. (So is her father.)

Because she is still in high school, she can of course change her mind. I'm hoping that your reaction will influence her to think in a different direction.

A. People choose career goals for a lot of different reasons. Income is just one of them. In fact, if earnings were the only reason for a selection, happiness on the job later on may not occur.

Your daughter may be thinking about the satisfaction she might derive from helping people in need, or perhaps she has been influenced by the model of someone she respects who is in that field or knows quite a bit about it.

I would be way out on a weak limb if I tried to convince her that she is wrong. It could be of value for her to discuss her choice with her school counselor, or perhaps she already has.

It may be better for you to hold back your criticism and try to be satisfied with her choice if you can be assured that she has looked into both the strengths and weaknesses of the occupation she selects.

I recognize your concern. Most of us as parents want "the best" for our children, but sometimes they know better than we do what is best for

And there is a bottom line we have to try to remember: It really is their life.

Q. I sometimes have the feeling that most of us are like my 12-year-old — dissatisfied with our own appearance or performance and eager to look and act like someone else. In her case it relates to her hair that is blond and straight while her best friend's hair is dark and curly.

I don't want to do anything about the color, but I suppose we could curl it. That might not satisfy her, though.

It may not seem like a big issue to you or me, but it certainly is to her.

A. Of course it is, and this is a good example of the importance of seeing through the eyes of a child as you obviously are doing.

A beauty shop appointment may be helpful. Giving in on the curling, performed by a beauty operator who is ready to share pictures of blondes who are attractive movie or music personalities, may get the compromise to work. The pictures might work alone, without the curling process, because the age of 12 is often quite impressionable.

Now some women may write, tell me that I'm out of my element and share the approach they would use with this girl. Fine - let me have it!

One factor that I am on more comfortable ground with is the belief that most of us really are not dissatisfied with how we perform and look, especially with a little clothing and cosmetic help. There are many who feel pretty good about themselves. Something about a satisfactory

"self-concept" often does help a person become less concerned about both appearance and performance.

Q. If it is normal I won't worry about it, but it does concern me that my son seems to be developing so slowly. He is 13 and his 11-year-old sister is taller and physically more mature than he is. So are most of his boyfriends.

Put my mind at ease or tell me what to do.

A. Visits to 7th, 8th and 9th grade classrooms clearly show that many boys lag behind many girls in their growth patterns. There are numerous exceptions, of course, but teachers working at those school levels are generally aware of this fact.

However, it is difficult to discuss any individual child's development without knowing him or her personally. That is why a visit with your son to your family physician might be worthwhile.

Your boy could be right within the "normal" range, but this additional source for evaluation seems like the right one to include.

California's climate affords wine-makers style choices

By Dan Berger Copley News Service

The development of style in wine making is a matter of choice, and more so in California than anywhere else.

This is mainly because in California, where the sun usually shines and grapes almost always ripen and mature, the wine maker has more methods to choose from than in regions where the wine maker must deal with the whims of Mother Nature.

Vichon Winery in the Napa Valley is a perfect example of a winery that defined a house style early on and has hewed to that style although the opulence and richness are not always evident.

Dr. George Vierra, a chemist who worked at both Charles Krug and Robert Mondavi wineries, has been making wines under the Vichon label since 1980. The style Vierra prefers in his Chardonnay and Sauvignon Blanc-blended wine is lean, crisp and austere, with a classical structure that shows the evidence of patience in the winery - and that demands patience in the cellaring.

It is a style not unlike that used by other wineries, yet Vierra has chosen to follow this line religiously, avoiding the temptation to make a bigger, fuller style of wine.

A squabble among the three owners of Vichon in 1984 led to the 1985 acquisition of Vichon by the Robert Mondavi Winery nearby. That led to the question of whether Mondavi's three children - Michael, Marcie and Tim — would attempt to change the style of wine Vichon was making.

That question may be partly answered by Vierra's decision to stay. A longtime friend of the Mondavis, he has remained at the core of Vichon. But another part of the answer was clarified recently when Tim Mondavi, the young, talented wine maker of the clan, spoke of the style of wine that Vichon was famous for, and how things would progress.

"We don't plan any change in the style of Chardonnay," he said, adding that it doesn't conflict with the style of wine Mondavi makes.

This style of Chardonnay is made by few other wine makers in California. It accentuates the delicacy in the grape rather than the opulence one can extract from it.

Vierra believes that Chardonnay does best when its natural fruit is held in a lean, tight, tart package, with only a shadow of complexity when the wine is young. He wants a wine to take on grace and suppleness as time goes by.

This counters at least two trends in Chardonnay making of the last few years that have given the wine an overblown, massive structure. One such tactic calls for the wine to get an added jolt of oak flavoring by aging the wine in new, small barrels.

Another concept involves injecting a buttery component by using a malolactic fermentation - a process that converts one strong acid (malic acid) into a weaker one (lactic acid).

Tasting the latest Vichon Chardonnay — the 1983, which sells for $15 — one still gets the impression of a fairly rich, spicy, substantial wine. But the most intriguing element of the wine is its crisp tartness and "long finish." The latter means the wine lasts on the palate for many minutes after the sip is swallowed, and it is a quality that is highly prized.

Yet this sort of long finish is not that slightly sweet, floral,

Wise Guys' an incredibly unfunny flick

By Bill Hagen Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD -- Director Brian De Palma isn't exactly renowned for chuckle-a-minute movies, but it really isn't shocking that he should take on a comedy, as he apparently has done with "Wise Guys."

I mean, he's done comedy before, or have you somehow forgotten "Get to Know Your Rabbit"? And then there also was "Scarface," but that probably doesn't count because it was strictly unintentional

And now comes "Wise Guys." which proves some things, one of them being that De Palma is to comedy what a cold sore is to romance.

And then there's the unquestioned supposition that all professional wrestlers have to be good actors. It's the nature of their business. In "Wise Guys" a hulk named Captain Lou Albano, identified as a former champion, body slams that theory into submission. He's laughably awful, which in a way is all right since it's the only laughable aspect of the movie.

The screenplay by George Gallo, which belies the maxim that inside everyone there is a good story waiting to be told, revolves around a couple of dolts named Harry (Danny DeVito) and Moe (Joe Piscopo), next-door neighbors and longtime friends with a vision of one day opening in Newark, N.J., an Italo-Judeo restaurant-deli.

Until they can, they work as flunkies for a high-powered gangster, entrusted with such duties as starting his car in the morning in case a competitor has wired a bomb to it.

They're also entrusted with placing large wagers for the boss at a racetrack. On one such mission, Harry, noting that the boss's track record, so to speak, has of late been rather abysmal, persuades Moe to bet the $10,000 on a different horse. Harry and Moe will keep the winnings and open their own establishment.

Who could ever guess what happens? To end the suspense, the boss's horse wins, which means he has $250,000 due him. Some mess for the guys, eh? It gets even messier but not a jot funnier.

The boss, sport that he is, decides to test the friendship and loyalty of Harry and Moe. He gives each a contract on the other, each being unaware of the arrangement, and if one of the contracts isn't fulfilled, both will be killed. Now it's up to Harry and Moe to outwit the boss and his henchmen. Out-half-wit them, anyhow.

Harry and Moe flee all the way to Atlantic City, the one place, of course, where the boss would never think of looking for them and a city in which he obviously has no contacts.

There they explain their plight to a friendly casino operator aren't they all? - who agrees to help them out. Oh, meanwhile they're financing their Atlantic City spree with the hulk's credit card, and you can imagine how that adds to the hilarity, especially when the hulk finds out about it. He's so upset he can't even enjoy the bed of lobsters he's devouring.

The first problem with "Wise Guys" is that there's nothing ribticklingly funny about the basic premise of the story, not even as dark humor. The second is that De Palma never knows when to pull back. He apparently has no awareness of when something isn't working, which is most of the time.

Too, he overindulges some outrageous overacting, particularly by, but hardly restricted to, the two principals.

"Wise Guys" brings to mind the days when Frank Sinatra and his pack were cranking out movies primarily designed to keep each of them working and to please themselves. It's not hard to envision De Palma and his cohorts laughing heartily as the daily rushes of "Wise Guys," congratulating each other on how funny they are.

"Wise Guys" does serve, however, to get in a lot of ethnic references and a lot of plugs for Resorts International.

DeVito and Piscopo spend most of their time yelling at and insulting each other, as if the script weren't insult enough. Albano spends most of his time grunting and inhaling food, or vice versa. Harvey Keitel, Ray Sharkey and Dan Hedaya mostly try to be sinister. The saddest waste is Patti LuPone, who has a brief role as DeVito's wife.

LuPone was the original "Evita." for which she won some prestigious awards.

"Wise Guys" is not only an incredibly unfunny comedy, it also even manages to make Newark seem unpleasant.

(The movie, "Wise Guys,"

Illegally posted Skropos signs disappear

Campaign signs illegally posted in Chino by members of Gus Skropos campaign have been removed - but who removed them remains a mystery.

Earl Nelson, director of community development, said that about eight signs advertising the June election bid of San Bernardino County Supervisor Gus Skropos were removed from utility poles along Riverside and Central avenues by Monday's deadline.

Nelson had said earlier that if the signs remained in the public right-of-way Monday, city employees would remove them and possibly charge the Skropos campaign.

But the signs disappeared Monday - mysteriously. "We did not send anyone down there to remove them," said Skropos. "I have no idea how they came down, I can't speculate. It may be the same people who put last week not to remove the signs, claiming he was being "a little bit harassed" by city officials.

The supervisor had pledged

He said he thought workers from a company he hired to hang signs might have posted them illegally. He also said his campaign workers did not post signs in front of Chino City Hall, as claimed by city officials.

Nelson said city workers did remove a few signs hung by other campaigners along utility poles in Chino.

Cities begin billing drunken drivers for wrecks

By Lori Moody

It's going to get more expensive to drink and drive especially when a motorist causes a wreck.

West Valley law enforcement and fire agencies are taking advantage of a state law allowing municipalities to seek up to $500 reimbursement for expenses incurred in sending out emergency personnel to the scene of such accidents.

"The law is an outgrowth of the public's concern for drunken drivers," said Philip Yenovkian, Upland police administrative assistant.

According to Article 8 of the Government Code, any person who negligently operates a motor vehicle, boat or aircraft while under the influence of a drug or alcohol, and who causes an incident resulting in an emergency response is liable for the costs.

The purpose is not to generate revenue, but to get the drunken driver to bear the cost of sending out officers to control traffic, paramedics to treat victims and whatever else is needed as a result of the mishap, Yenovkian

Based on figures supplied by the National Highway Traffic and Safety Administration, drunken driving accidents cost the city of Upland more than $500,000 in 1985, Yenovkian said. That includes legal costs, insurance, medical care and emergency response time.

Upland police began sending out bills through the city's finance department about three weeks ago. It is the first agency in the West Valley to implement the law since it went into effect Jan. 1.

The agency has sent out at least nine requests for reimbursement, with bills averaging about $45. The amounts increase has more agencies are included.

Other local agencies, such as Rancho Cucamonga sheriff's, Montclair, Fontana and Chino police, are researching implementing the law.

"I think it's excellent. It's (drunken driving accidents) a tremendous expense, not only incurred by the victim but by the public agency," Chino Traffic Officer Al Cheatham said.

The Montclair Fire Department, which already has a billing procedure for permits and building plan reviews, has "absolutely no reservations" in billing a drunken driver, said Division Chief Gary Turner.

Ontario police intend to seek reimbursement for 65 accidents which have occured since January, said administrative assistant Lee Pearl. He estimated that most of the requests would run about $100 each.

One of the incidents was a fatal traffic collision. That bill could run close to the $500 maximum amount, Pearl said.

Actually, if agencies were able to recover all the costs involved in a fatal traffic accident, including several days of investigation, the amount could run into the thousands of dollars, Pearl said.

One Orange County police department figured that it costs more than $700 to respond to an injury accident, said Marcia Gilchristy, administrative assistant for state Sen. Ed

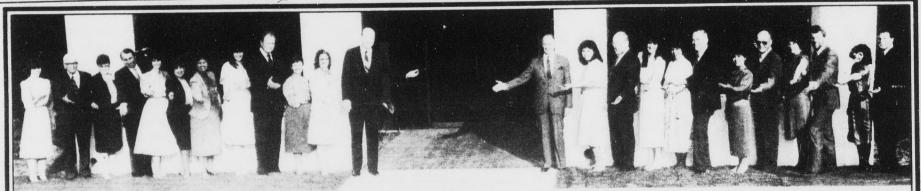

Royce, R-Anaheim.

As a result, Royce, the author of the law, is attempting to increase the limit to $1,000.

However, motorists who have to fork over the cash are out of luck trying to recover the money through their insurance companies. The law prohibits an insurance company from providing such coverage or paying the assessment.

If it turns out that the person is found not guilty later on in court, the money would be refunded, Turner said.

peachy, pearlike, or even Rieslinglike element that so many Chardonnays have gotten in the last few years. By prohibiting the wine from going through the broadening malolactic fermentation, Vierra preserves more of the basic crisp structure of the wine. This is a key element in how the wine was made

Another element of style is that Vierra uses only 130-gallon barrels (called puncheons) to age the wine. These larger barrels impart less oak flavor to the wine, yet give it an elemental character

The development of Vichon's style is a blend of disparate elements that can be relied on, year after year. When you buy a Vichon Chardonnay, you will be getting a fairly crisp wine that lacks the obvious

"lusciousness" of some California Chardonnays, but it is a wine that, with only a year or two of bottle age, takes on grand proportions.

Similarly, a Barrel Fermented Chardonnay made by Flora Springs winery in the Napa Valley (quite near Vichon, actually) offers far more complexity than other "big style" wines.

Wine maker Ken Deis also prevents the wine from undergoing a malolactic fermentation. He obtains his note of complexity by using a different strain of yeast.

There are dozens of yeast strains used to ferment wine, and wine makers believe they vield different aromas in the wine. One of the most controversial strains is Montrachet yeast, which has been accused of spoiling more than one wine. Even the most careful wine maker has been hurt by this controversial yeast

But Deis uses it with great care, and his 1983 Chardonnay "Barrel Fermented" ($18) is as opulent as any wine on the market. It reminds me of a French Burgundy — decadent and delicious

Another style variable is found in the barrels used by the wine maker. Some wine makers love to use the broad-grained Limousin oak of France, which imparts a light Cognac aroma to the wine. Others like the more delicate Nevers or Troncais oak.

But Ken Burnap, owner of Santa Cruz Mountain Vineyards, found a new type of oak, and the result is a spectacular wine.

The 1984 Santa Cruz Mountain Vineyard Chardonnay (unreleased, but to be priced at only $9.50) is a delightful, intriguing wine with more subtle flavors than most other Chardonnays Burnap said he once asked one barrel maker what makes the great wines of Burgundy, and the barrel maker gave him the runaround. But over the years, the barrel maker and Burnap got to know each other, and in 1984, the barrel maker told him the secret: Voges.

He said the Voges oak barrels were the ones that often made the classic white Burgundies of France, so Burnap acquired some and used them in aging his 1984 Chardonnay. The result is a most appealing wine - and Burnap says he intends to continue using Voges oak for his Chardonnay because he likes the character it yields.

It is obvious that the development of style in Chardonnay is a combination of elements. No one has the right answer, but the quality of the various attempts makes us all winners.

Marathon unless I carbohydrate-

But the practice itself has decreased in popularity because the old way was so unpleasant due to the carbohydratedepletion phase, she said

"A lot of people don't know how to do it properly. They may try to increase the carbohydrates to 80 or 90 percent, which is really hard to do. Most people, though, can eat 70 percent carbohydrates by emphasizing Chinese foods and spagnetti. You eat a little from the meat group, four ounces of chicken or fish a day at the most. What you're pushing is the fruit, vegetable and grain groups (eight to 12 servings).

"There should be no more than two servings from the dairy group per day.'

As a dietitian, Coleman always stresses nutrition from the four food groups (milk, meat, fruits and vegetables, breads and cereals). Her optimal breakdown for basic training and the first three days of carbo-loading:

Two servings apiece from the milk and meat groups.

Four servings each from the fruits and vegetables and breads and cereals groups.

For the 70-percent carboloading diet, followed the final three days before competition: Two servings apiece from the milk and meat groups.

Eight servings apiece from the fruits and vegetables and breads and cereals groups.

For optimal effect, calorie consumption should remain stable during the loading phase - no more, no less than during normal training. This may translate to at least 3,000 calories a day for men, 2,500 for

"The problem with eating 3,000 calories," said Coleman, "is that it's hard to get 70 percent of them from complex carbohydrates without getting full quickly. These carbohydrates (such as cereal, breads, fruits, vegetables, muffins, pasta) are high in fiber and very filling.'

The solution: simple carbs to round out the competition diet. That means a green light for goodies like cakes, pies and cookies - in moderate amounts. Coleman's recommended amount: 50-60 percent complex, 10-20 percent simple.

"The best way is to eat small, frequent meals throughout the day," said Coleman, echoing the consensus of new-age nutritionists.

That might mean cereal for breakfast, a mid-morning snack of juice and crackers or a muffin, a lunch of split pea soup or beans and cornbread, a midafternoon snack of apple pie and an evening meal of spaghetti or Chinese food with the appropriate condiments.

Most modern nutritionists with the exception of the very strict Robert Haas of "Eat to Win" notoriety - maintain that keeping fat consumption to 30 percent of calories is adequate. While devotees of Haas and the Pritikin diet claim 10 percent of fat is optimal.

troubles with family and work as a result. Many times they don't even realize the crime was the cause.

"Most folks want to forget what happened so they keep themselves very busy," he said, adding that they still struggle internally with feelings of rage and humiliation.

When the perpetrators of the crimes are caught, some victims are only half vindicated because the fear lives on, Wysocki said. When the criminal isn't caught, it can even be worse.

"A lot of people who are victims never feel vindicated and, especially if the person in never caught, they often wonder, 'Is he still out there looking at me?" he said.

The group therapy also will help those who have a history of being victims to change their lifestyles.

For some, it's a matter of selfesteem, and with the help of others in the group, Wysocki hopes to give victims the confidence to get past their pain and take charge of their lives.

The group meets on Wednesday evenings. The $35 cost is covered by most insurance, Wysocki said, adding that those who cannot afford the sessions will not be turned away.

R.C. councilman sees favorable ruling by county on annexation

By Marianne Aiken

A Rancho Cucamonga city councilman says he thinks the county will look favorably on a city attempt to annex about 750-800 acres north of the city limits.

The annexation would give the city power to block plans for a controversial rock quarry across the street from an Etiwanda neighborhood.

Mike Walker, director of the county flood control district, said he will take the proposal to an 11-member citizens advisory committee for a recommendation in about two weeks.

"We haven't made any recommendation to the Board of Supervisors as yet," Walker said.

Walker said the city sent the county a letter asking whether it supported the annexation or not.

That set off a chain of events that will start with the advisory committee, whose recommendation will go to the Board of Supervisors, and then to the Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFC), Walker said.

Rancho Cucamonga
Councilman Dick Dahl said if the land is declared surplus by the county flood control district, after it is annexed, one of the county's concerns is that the city may lower density levels in the habitable portions of the parcel, making the land less valuable.

"One of the the things that was brought to my attention by the county was that we may rezone those areas downward."

"A lot of people think they're getting a free ride and running around Europe spending taxpayers' money," Mason said.

There are still 3-5 instrumental positions that need to be filled for the tour. Two trombone players, including a bass trombone; a jazz trumpet player; a lead trumpet player and a lead bass guitar player are needed.

For the first time, a vocalist will accompany the ensemble this year.

Mason said he's looking forward to directing the band in front of European audiences.

"One of the things that sends chills up and down my spine is when they want an encore, they'll stamp their feet and clap their hands at the same time," he said. "We're very honored that each time we played at Montreux, we received an encore."

with smoke detectors range from about 35 percent of single-family dwellings in Ontario to about 60 percent of homes in Rancho Cucamonga.

Nobody disputes that smoke detectors save lives. Statistics kept by the state Fire Marshal's Office show that residential fires in California now are confined to their point of origin about 80 percent of the time, up from 50 percent 10 years ago. The increase is a direct result of the growing use of smoke detectors, state fire officials say.

Unfortunately, owning a smoke detector doesn't always guarantee safety for the people it's supposed to protect. A 13year-old Pomona girl almost died last August after being overcome by smoke from a fire. Her house had two smoke detectors, but her father had taken the batteries out and had neglected to replace them.

The Pomona girl was lucky. Two toddiers died in an Ontario house fire in 1976; the family had recently been given a smoke detector, but it was never taken out of its box.

"The only problem with manditory smoke detectors is that you can't make people maintain them," said Hawthorne.

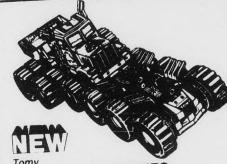

Try as they might, fire officials can't make people buy them, either. According to Hawthorne, some people don't realize how simple smoke detectors are to install; others might think the smoke will wake them up in time to put out the fire.

"They won't go to the store and spend $10 for the cheapest form of insurance they can buy," said Alexander.

Scott enters Pepsi meet

Steve Scott, the American mile record holder, has accepted a bid to compete in the ninth annual Pepsi Invitational tract meet May 17 at UCLA's Drake

The former Upland High School star, who turned 30 this week, has a 3:47.69 lifetime best for the mile, recorded in 1982. The mark still stands as the fourth best ever in the world.

The 6-foot-1, 165-pound Scott had a string of five consecutive Pepsi mile victories snapped last year. He was defeated in dramatic fashion at the wire by Joaquim Cruz, the 800 meters Olympic champion from Brazil.

Cruz will return to defend his title. Also in the field will be 800 meter Olympic bronze medalist Earl Jones, making his first serious bid in the mile.

Ruttman set

ATLANTA - Joe Ruttman, one of 14 NASCAR drivers voted into the unique Atlanta Invitational field by Winston Cup racing fans, believes he has a legitimate shot at the $75,000 top prize.

The race, companion to the $1 million Winston, is scheduled for Saturday over the 1.522-mile oval.

Ruttman, who moved from his Upland home to North Carolina when he joined the NASCAR circuit, is off to his best start in the stock car ranks. He already has a pair of second place finishes at North Wilkesboro, N.C. and Martinsville, Va.

One of the reasons Ruttman is optimistic about the Invitational is the result of three days of testing at Atlanta last month.

"We learned some things testing that should really help us in the Invitational," Ruttman said. "We've got a 100 percent better car than we had for the March (Motorcraft 500) race."

Ruttman is driving Buick LeSabre owned by drag racing standout Kenny Bernstein and sponsored by Quaker State. The Atlanta Invitational, contested this year for the first time, is a $300,000 preliminary to the Winston, a bonus race that pits all the 1985 winners. The winner of the Invitational will earn a spot in the Winston for 1987.

Hearings asked regarding disaster aid formula

WASHINGTON - Fourteen California lawmakers, including Rep. Jerry Lewis, R-Redlands, called last week for a congressional hearing on proposed regulations they said "represent an unprecedented, drastic attack on federal disaster assistance" to state and local governments nationwide.

The proposed rules would reduce the existing 75 percent federal, 25 percent local costsharing formula for public federal disaster assistance to a sliding scale aimed at an overall 50-50 cost split.

Federal Emergency Management Agency officials say their proposed regulations, which would place a greater burden on state and local governments to pay for disaster relief, are intended "to support the administration's balanced budget goals."

California lawmakers say the rules could severely affect the state, which recently sustained more than $50 million in FEMAqualified damages. California's latest flooding disaster would have qualified it for federal aid under the new formula, but at a greater cost to state and local governments.

In a letter sent to Rep. Robert Roe, D-N.J., chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Subcommittee on Water Resources, the California lawmakers said state emergency management officials "have indicated that 60 percent of the presidential disasters in the last five years in California would not have been declared if the new regulations had been in effect."

The letter, co-authored by

Sacramento; Doug Bosco, D-Occidental; and Norm Mineta, D-San Jose, asks Roe to conduct a hearing on the proposed regulations that could "dramatically increase the burden on state and local governments to the point where they would be unable to absorb them.' The letter also was signed by Lewis, who said in an interview he has "some serious skepticism" about the FEMA proposal. "It's critical that we recognize that we shouldn't just automatically shrug our shoulders and say this is Gram-Rudman (budget cutting) time," he said.

The lawmakers pointed out the National Emergency Management Association concluded state and local governments already provide up to 85 percent of all emergency management resources.

"Under the new eligibility formula, the prospects for the continuation of even the existing small increment of federal disaster assistance are even dimmer," the lawmakers wrote.

FEMA itself says 61 of the 111 disasters that qualified states for federal assistance funds over the past five years would have been declared ineligible for public assistance under the proposed rules, saving the federal government about $400 million.

The proposed rules do not change individuals' disaster relief qualifications, although they do require state or local governments to pick up 25 percent of crisis counseling costs and 25 percent of costs for housing people in mobile

A FEMA official said only about 5 percent of displaced people are housed in mobile homes, so the cost to local governments for that new cost would be "minimal."

The new rules primarily affect federal assistance dealing with repair of state and local government-owned roads, buildings and facilities.

FEMA's proposal is based on a sliding scale, with public assistance reaching up to 90 percent in some cases, zero in others, aimed at a 50 percent federal, 50 percent state and local cost sharing ratio.

To be declared eligible for federal public assistance, California would have to sustain damage of at least $28.5 million, or $1 per capita, under the new formula. FEMA calls that a "capability indicator."

If the state qualifies, FEMA then would require California to contribute an up-front $28.5 million before state agencies could receive federal aid under the agency's cost-sharing formula. Nevertheless, the California representatives said the "sizable initial threshold" of the FEMA rule makes it "highly possible that a major disaster could hit an isolated area, causing significant loss of life and tens of millions of dollars in damages without being declared eligible for a dime in federal disaster assistance.'

If damage to state-owned facilities was less than the $28.5 million cutoff point, the state agencies themselves might not qualify for federal assistance, but local governments could still qualify under a sliding scale starting at $2.50 in damage per capita.

Federal assistance to local governments would begin at a 75 percent federal, 25 percent local basis, but FEMA could kick in more dollars based on the amount of damage per capita above $2.50. FEMA will accept public comments on its proposed rules until June 17, and attempt to implement them before the next fiscal year begins Oct. 1, an agency official

Get vitamins from food, not pills, scientific panel says

controversy about what dosage is harmful to which group, the WASHINGTON - An increasing number of Americans are taking massive doses of vitamin and mineral supplements, risking severe health damage, according to scientists convened by the American Dietetic Association.

The rising number of vitamin pill poppers is encouraged by advertising promising everything from prevention of cancer and osteoporosis to relief from premenstrual syndrome and impotency, the scientists said at a news conference Monday.

"What we have today is a return, through the use of single nutrients and vitamins, to the snake oil salesmen of the 1800s," said Dr. David Heber, chief of the division of clinical nutrition at the UCLA School of Medicine.

"We are concerned as scientists and physicians with the long-term safety and consequences of taking single nutrients and vitamins ... in high doses for long periods of time both because of the direct toxicity resulting from taking these medications and also because of the fact that it gives a person a sense of false reassurance and thereby gives them permission to ignore the rest of their health.

Heber said diseases like cancer and osteoporosis do have some links to nutrition, but claims that the diseases can be prevented by diet alone is misleading. The panel urged Americans to get their vitamins from food, not Heber said vitamin and mineral supplements make up a $3 billion industry, which is expected to grow at a 15 percent annual rate.

Individual case studies of people who took too many drugs increased to 24,000 last year. From those studies scientists conclude that:

- Vitamin A at five times the Recommended Dietary Allowance can cause headaches, nosebleeds, liver damage, mental disturbances and birth defects with chronic use.

- Vitamin D at 120 times the RDA can cause calcium deposits in the kidneys which can lead to kidney failure.

- Vitamin B6 at 100 times the RDA can cause fatigue, nerve damage and numbness of the hands and feet.

- Vitamin E at 40 times the RDA can cause high blood pressure, extreme fatigue and may block conversion of carotenes to vitamin A.

But, as Dr. Victor Herbert of New York's Mount Sinai School of Medicine said: "By the time you've got the symptoms, you're already long poisoned.'

Symptoms of chronic vitamin supplement use are often mistaken for other diseases, Heber said, compounded by the fact that many people don't tell their doctors that they are using

Even "so-called water-soluble" vitamins like vitamin C - long believed to be completely safe

County has chore trying to place Latin children

Finding enough Latin American foster families to take care of the increasing number of Latin children entering the county is difficult, says Manuel Jimenez, foster home coordinator with the Los Angeles County Children's Services

'We try very hard to place Hispanic children with Hispanic families, but it isn't always possible," he added.

More than 350 new Latin children come to the county each month needing foster homes. That's more than 40 percent of all the cases the department handles, said Jimenez. But only 500 Latin foster families - or one-sixth of the total exist in the county.

In the valley, Latin families represent 31 percent of all foster homes. But the proportion of Latin children needing foster families is higher. In Pomona, only 18 percent of foster homes are

"There aren't nearly enough Spanish-speaking foster parents," said John Baird with the Pomona Office of the Children's Services Department. "We often have emergency placement situations, and sometimes this results in having to make placements in San Bernardino County.'

Jimenez said that L. A. county places 800 children of all ethnic groups a month. "We have about 3,000 homes in the county. In terms of 8 million people, that is, by no means, enough.

The situation in San Bernardino County presents less of a crisis, with 494 Latin foster homes for about 72 Latin children each month, San Bernardino County officials said. Latin children represent only 9 percent of the foster care cases in that county.

San Bernardino and Los Angeles county offices in Rancho Cucamonga and Pomona handle most of the case load for the valley. The groups also search for potential new foster homes.

Jimenez said placing Latin children with Anglo families can create as many problems as it solves.

'We can have kids who can't really communicate with the families they're placed with," he explained. "Or they can face a culture that's alien to them.

"Where we have the critical needs are the homes for the little ones under the age of 5. They often have the hardest time adjusting to new environments.

To put children in surroundings with a familiar culture, foster care officials often place youngsters with families far away from their

'Our ideal is eventually to reunite the family, and that can be difficult when a mother has to drive 45 minutes to see her child," said Jimenez.

Economic differences between a child's foster family and his or her natural family can present problems as easily as cultural changes, Jimenez

"We had a little girl from a low-income family who was placed with a wealthy family. They took her to all sorts of places, took her to Disneyland, gave her things she never had. Then when the time came to return to her parents, she didn't want to.

While foster care officials are always looking for host families, they warn that foster parenting has become a complicated process. "There is a tremendous need, certainly, especially for Hispanic homes," said Carlisle George with the Pomona office. "But there are a number of kids with very serious problems. Years ago, the average parent with average parenting skills could deal with most of our kids. # Boston, Miami police plan to test officers for drugs

BOSTON - In what may signal the start of a national trend, police departments in Boston and Miami plan to begin subjecting all their officers to random testing for illegal drugs

The sweeping scope of the programs goes considerably beyond the policies of other law enforcement agencies across the country, which typically require such tests only in certain specified circumstances.

However, in March a special presidential commission issued a report urging all employers to consider routine drug testing of their workers in order to help weaken organized crime's hold on the nation through an illicit drug market that is thriving because of a "voracious" public demand.

Citing the sensitive nature of their professions, police agencies and those companies engaged in public protection and safety have been among the first to respond to this appeal

The U.S. Customs Service, for example, announced last month that it will begin a drugscreening program of key personnel this summer. The Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant in New Hampshire began a mandatory drug-testing program from "the president on down" last month. A number of defense contractors also have instituted universal testing.

Responding to a serious and well-documented drug problem in south Florida, police officials in Miami last month adopted a policy of annual medical screenings of all officers including a random urinalysis test to detect marijuana, cocaine and other illegal substances. A new contract that includes acceptance of the testing policy was ratified by the city's police officers union by a lopsided

Here in Boston, however, the police officers union last week filed suit in federal court in an attempt to block the universal testing, which is set to begin June 21

'We're the first to agree that there's no place in police work for cops who use or distribute drugs," said Frank McGee, an attorney who represents the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association. "But to require an officer to be tested when there is no probable cause or suspicion constitutes an unlawful search in violation of the 4th Amendment

Beyond the constitutional objections, civil libertarians and other critics of mandatory universal testing argue that the tests themselves sometimes are unreliable

At an April 24 news conference in which he announced his department's new policy, Boston Police ommissioner Francis Roache brushed aside all objections, saying: "I have an obligation to make sure our employees are drug-free. The one issue we must remember, is that we're engaged in public safety.

Under the Boston department's program, all of the city's 1,800 officers and 600 civilian employees will be tested randomly for cocaine, heroin, marijuana and PCP during the course of each year Roache said the four drugs were chosen because studies indicate they are the substances most often abused. The tests will be administered with no advance notice. Testing only for specific drugs also greatly enhances the accuracy of the urinalysis, according to Boston police officials. Critics have charged that general drug tests are frequently not sophisticated enough to correctly pinpoint the existence of specific drugs in the body's system

Delta Theta Chi meet

Upsilon Chapter, Delta Theta Chi Sorority, will meet at the home of Marjorie Wilcox in Upland tonight at 7.

Following dinner, a business meeting will be conducted by Berniece Johnson. The nominating committee will prepare a new slate of officers for the coming year.

If any member of the Boston department tests positive on the first screening, one of three follow-up processes will be used to verify the results. If someone tests positive on the second procedure, the employee then will be allowed to bring in an independent expert of his or her own choosing. A finding of drug use will result in departmental discipline, including termination.

The city's police officials and leaders of its police unions disagree over the extent of drug usage within the department.

'We have found evidence that some of our officers are involved with drugs," said James Hart, the department's legal affairs adviser. "We have to assume we have the same numbers (of drug users) as is found in the general population

In rebuttal, counsel McGee of the patrolmen's association notes that only one Boston police officer has been dismissed on drug charges in the last year. "There's no evidence that it's a widespread problem," he said.

At the Chicago Police Department, which generally requires drug testing only of new recruits and of officers seeking promotion or those returning from suspension or extended medical leave, one out of every three applicants who wants to ioin the force is rejected because of drug use.

"I find it incredible that the number is so high," said Eric Ostrov, a psychological consultant to the department who reported on the drug testing of 379 police candidates last year in a February address to the American Academy of Forensic

One of every five candidates failed the urine test, most showing signs of having recently smoked marijuana, and a few showed signs of having used cocaine and other illegal drugs, Ostrov said. Among the candidates whose urine showed no signs of drug use, 13 percent admitted to using drugs.

Candidates who fail the Chicago department's urine test are automatically eliminated from the program. Those who pass the urine test but admit to drug use on the required questionnaire are referred to a department psychologist to determine whether they will be removed from the program.

A Chicago police spokesman said the idea of universal testing of all officers had been rejected by the department because of the substantial cost of such a program. (In Boston, the initial urinalysis tests will cost $18 to $25 each; the more elaborate follow-up procedure will cost about $140 each.)

Despite concerns over cost and possible constitutional roadblocks, there are indications that other big-city police departments may follow the lead of Boston and Miami in moving to a universal drug-testing program.

"I've had inquiries from Los Angeles, from Houston and other cities. There's a lot of interest in what we're doing here," said Boston police spokesman Hart, who expressed confidence that his department's program will survive the current court challenge. In Miami, the mandatory testing is part of a broad police reform wave.

"We're cleaning up our department; people we hire are not always saints, and there are a lot of opportunities for them to violate the drug laws," said Maj. Larry Boemler, a departmental spokesman. "We decided universal testing was one solution. Something has to be done about the problem - drugs are ruining America.

Government computers systems vulnerable

WASHINGTON — Electronic mice seemed to be nibbling away inside the files of the computer system some nights at the Internal Revenue Service.

Officials were baffled by missing files that had been there the day before.

Investigators discovered the files were disappearing around 2 and 3 a.m. when no one was in the office. Someone was entering the computer system from outside by telephone and then erasing the files. Fortunately for the government, this computer system handled interoffice business, not taxpayer records.

A phone tap led to the arrest of a 32-year-old Greenbelt, Md., man who was using an ordinary home computer, jacked up with sophisticated software. He pleaded guilty in federal court here to computer fraud charges that carry a sentence of as much as a year and a possible $100,000 fine.

This wasn't a case of another hacker like the teen-ager who a few years ago broke into the computer system at the Los Alamos National Laboratory

The Greenbelt man was more typical of what actually occurs in most computer break-ins at the government: the perpetrator is someone who works for the government, often a state or local government, or works for a firm that does business with the government.

The Greenbelt man was employed by a firm that had sought a software contract with the IRS. While preparing a contract proposal, he had apparently learned the IRS computers' telephone number and its password, "Zeus."

Interviews in recent years with those convicted of computer crimes against the government have found that such people are, on average, about 30 years old, work for the government or a government contractor, and are considered good employees (though, surprisingly, one-fifth of the 46 people interviewed had criminal

The people usually break into a government computer system with the idea of making money - by entering false claims or a false name on a

In the recent IRS case, federal officials say they did not learn a motive.

Richard P. Kusserow, who heads a federal project on computer security, told a congressional panel last year that he's talked to some people convicted of computer crimes who simply "could not ignore the temptation of a vulnerable system.'

A major finding of Kusserow's project, as well as a study earlier this year by the congressional

Office of Technology Assessment, has been the fact that government computer systems are often extremely vulnerable.

More than 20,000 mainframe computers are used by the U.S. government and more are being added daily. Forty percent of federal agencies have no restrictions on dialing into their computer system, and 80 percent do not use coding.

Often the people who commit computer crimes discover the weaknesses in the system in the normal course of their jobs, according to Kusserow.

Hackers operating completely outside the government aren't really a problem - at least so far as anyone knows. Government security is so lax in many agencies that it's only by accident when mischief is uncovered.

Kusserow told the congressional panel that he's frequently asked how often people bust into the Social Security system, and he answers, "We have had not one single instance of any hacker entering into the Social Security database because we're operating such a primitive system that we don't even have dial-in capability.'

But dial-in and networking capacity are coming to many federal agencies, and Kusserow and others are worried because the supervisors responsible for the security of computer operations are often from "the generation that didn't grow up on Pac Man and was afraid of looking at the CRT's.

Some members of Congress are trying to correct that this year by providing more training in computers and computer security for government officials

"Security is pretty lax, it appears to be the weakest link," said Anthony C. Taylor, director a House Science and Technology subcommittee.

Taylor's boss, Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., and others are worried about what could happen if someone broke into the Federal Reserve System or the federal air traffic control system.

An IRS spokesman said no lasting damage was done by the break-in there and that it's unlikely anyone could get into taxpayer records.

"There's all sorts of checks and cross-checks built into those systems," the spokesman said. "It would be extremely difficult."

Congress this year may tighten the 1984 Computer Fraud Act, which prohibits unauthorized entry of government computers.

A House subcommittee has finished work on legislation that would prohibit computer bulletin boards from posting the passwords and procedures used for accessing either a government and private computer systems.

Popular geraniums held in high esteem by gardeners

By Patrick Denton Copley News Service

It would be difficult to find a home garden in summer that didn't house a few geranium plants. This popular container and bedding plant is well loved and highly esteemed by both outdoor and indoor gardeners for its easy blooming and undemanding habits.

Still, there often is a little confusion surrounding the geranium, probably because there are several different kinds, each with its own personality and best uses.

Today, let's begin looking at the four types of most interest to home gardeners - the zonal, or common geranium; the regal, or Martha Washington geranium; scented-leaved geranium; ivy

By far the most often used by home gardeners is the common garden or zonal geranium, which grows into a small succulentstemmed shrub with soft, velvety leaves that often have a dark circular band or zone located just inside the outer edge.

The flowers are borne in large, flattish clusters of either single or double florets, in many shades of red, pink, salmon, rose, orange, violet and white.

It used to be the only way to propagate garden geraniums was to take cuttings of partly hardened growth in summer for freshly rooted plants to overwinter and blossom the following summer. However, now there are varieties that can be grown from seed as well, and these for the most part grow into smaller, bushier, more compact and disease-free plants. These common garden or zonal geraniums thrive in a warm sunny spot and rather dry conditions. They do not need rich soil. In fact, they tend to flower more profusely, like nasturtiums, in a slightly lean soil. They combine beautifully with other flowering plants that flourish under similar conditions. The common garden or zonal geranium is also an ideal subject for growing in tree, or standard form. Start in spring with a young plant purchased or grown at home, preferably from a cutting for a sturdier trunk, and begin pinching off lower leaves to force growth to the top of the plant. Fertilize regularly and move to a larger pot with a longer stake at monthly intervals, ending up with a pot about 8 inches wide and a stake 30 to 36 inches long

By summer's end you can stop removing leaves and let the head of the plant develop. Bring it indoors well before frost, and in late winter, when new growth begins, keep the head pinched back for shapeliness and enjoy your umbrellalike crowning glory of bloom all spring, summer and fall the following year.

Washington. These for the most part grow into larger, more rangy plants with leaves that are more deeply serrated and crinkly than the common geranium. Martha Washingtons also bear larger and more showy flowers in looser, rounded clusters. The flowers are large and fancy, many of them heavily frilled and bearing gorgeous dark markings and blotches against lighter shades of pink, red, lavender, rose and salmon.

Anyone who clings to the small size of his or her kitchen as an excuse not to have parties won't consider Ellen Brown a friend.

Brown is the former food editor of USA Today and the Cincinnati Post, a 1985 COOK'S Magazine honoree, and author of the enormously popular book, "Cooking with the New American Chefs" (Harper & Row, $12.95 paper, $22.95 cloth).

She is also a hostess who constantly entertains, despite the lilliputian dimensions of her kitchen - 4 by 8 feet. Given the fact that, as a food professional, she continually tests recipes that require a fairly large assortment of cooking equipment, that mini-kitchen is in reality even smaller than it would be for most people.

Brown is renowned for planning imaginative menus, instilling each event with a style and flair of its own, and making it all look as if a full staff had pulled it together. Perhaps her favorite gathering was the 10th birthday party for Sam Cat, a theme that allowed her to recycle 9-Lives cat food cans as candle holders for the votive lights that lined the entrance walk.

The guests who come to Brown's parties expect a good time, and, especially, superb food. Such is the curse of a great reputation. Over the years she has come up with rules, tips and improvisations on how to maximize the minimal

Look at all the recipes you are making for a party and do the total preparation work at one time. For example, in a single operation, chop all the onions you'll need for all the recipes.

Pegboards can be wonderfully decorative items, but also utilize them to hang utensils you use most frequently - skillets, slotted spoons, scissors, magnetized knife rack, etc.

If you run out of refrigerator space, chill wine in the bathtub, or a washtub outside if you have a patio or back yard. Apartment buildings with fire escapes have yet another auxiliary cooling spot.

Plan cleanup time while cooking. Every so often take 5 minutes to clear the counter. Don't feel compelled to wash out a pot before reusing it - often a quick rinse will suffice. Plan a menu that will not require the oven at party time, freeing it for storage of dirty pots and dishes between courses.

Stow out of the way (under the sink or in a closet) any equipment you won't be using - food processor, toaster, blender and the like.

If you don't use your electric can opener often, replace it with a good manual one. It works as fast, can be put away in a drawer, and is more easily washed. If you mostly use the electric model to sharpen knives, buy a good sharpening steel instead, which also goes into the drawer.

The centerpieces for many of Brown's buffets are large, hearty salads that serve as the main course. One stunning example from her book is Anne Greer's creation for The Terrace restaurant at the Anatole Hotel in Dallas.

Local voters expected to sign petition

By Andrew Horan

West Valley voters will join other Californians to push a stringent drinking water initiative onto the November ballot this week, according to the measure's supporters.

Volunteer and paid petition circulators have collected almost 375,000 signatures statewide from registered voters in the six weeks since the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act initiative was

The bill, which would impose harsh penalties against those who knowingly contaminate "drinking water with chemicals known to cause cancer or reproductive toxicity," needs 393,000 signatures to qualify for the ballot.

Supporters of the drive expect to gather those signatures easily and hope to add another 200,000 for a "security cushion" against phony signatures by the May 26 filing deadline, according to Judy Tyler, the initiative's Southern California coordinator.

The toxics initiative has been one of the more popular petition drives this year, according to Kelly Kimble. Kimble's Westlake Village-based firm is managing the toxics drive.

Kimble's company has managed 40 petition drives across the nation since 1972, he

"The toxics issue is one of the most popular issues we've worked on," he said in a phone interview. "It's right up there with the (California) Lottery as being one of the easiest to get signatures on.'

Kimble estimated that 5,000 to 7,000 paid circulators have joined hundreds of Sierra Club and California League of Conservation Voters volunteers to collect signatures.

They are collecting an estimated 10,000 signatures a day at shopping malls, swap meets and "wherever the largest amount of people are moving the slowest," Kimble said.

More than 175 paid circulators are working from Kimble's Montclair office, according to office manager Denise Bartholemew.

She said local voters are contributing "at least 1,000 signatures a day" to the initiative, which would levy fines up to $2,500 a day against any person who has violated the tough standards.

Bartholemew said residents will find the circulators, who earn between $8 and $15 an hour to collect signatures, at the Montclair Plaza and other shopping centers in the West

Technology has its drawbacks

SACRAMENTO — A wave of technological conveniences designed to help make life easier for the blind is making many people wonder if that technology is the best for those it is supposed to help.

Talking books, a wide array of specialized computer programs, and even machines that can read any printed page aloud are making information available quickly and easily for those who cannot see.

Jeff Thom, a 32-year-old attorney in Sacramento who has been blind since birth, said the new technology is "marvelous, it's great. It will make more occupational areas accessible to the blind"

But, at the same time, Thom is worried that the new conveniences may undermine the use of Braille, which still is the only method available to blind people who need to use the written word.

"If you're using the technology, it doesn't mean you don't need a lot of the skills that Braille provides for," Thom said.

If people who can't see come to rely primarily on audio information, Thom said, "The potential exists for a great decrease in writing ability.

"If you had never read anything ... you would have no idea how to write, or how to spell, or use punctuation," he said.

"Calculators, if used properly, can be a godsend. If not, they can lead to a decline in math skills. The same is true" of the technology that eliminates the need to use Braille, Thom said.

Fred Sinclair, director of the Clearing House Depository for Handicapped children, agreed with Thom that there are disadvantages to using books on tapes. Writing skills and Braille-reading skills cannot be taught that way, he said, and textbooks for fields such as science and math can't be recorded.

The advantages to the new technology, however, outweigh the disadvantages, said Scott Richmond, professional services director of the Society for the Blind.

Richmond acknowledged "a certain amount of validity" to Thom's reasoning, but said the new technology will allow the blind to be more competitive.

"Technology has the potential to make us all lazy," Richmond said. "I don't think the blind is any different from sighted people. It's really a question of What mostly concerns Thom, .

Richmond, and others are recent federal budget cuts, which they fear could lead to the eventual replacement of Braille by cheaper, easier-to-produce books on tape.

According to Sinclair, an audio cassette that costs 85 cents can hold as much as 50 pages of a high school textbook.

By contrast, he said, it takes two, sometimes three pages, to produce one page of a standard high school text in Braille, and each Braille page costs 30 cents. The federal and state governments subsidize materials for the blind, underwriting the costs of producing Braille books.

As a result of the Gramm-Rudman budget act, which requires across-the-board cutbacks in federal spending, the budget for the National

Couple married within walls of huge sand castle

TREASURE ISLAND, Fla. — Judi Allard and Pete Hunt hope their wedding lasts longer than the place where the ceremony took place — a five-story castle built with 35,000 tons of sand.

The wedding Saturday on "The Lost City of Atlantis" drew dozens of uninvited guests, who watched from behind a fence and a moat surrounding the temporary structure billed the "World's Largest Sand Castle."

The crowd cheered, and several people called for a pose from the bride and groom as they stood atop the 58-foot-high sand castle, which measures 250 feet by 150 feet.

Allard, head housekeeper at a motel, and Hunt, a television repairman, had planned a June wedding. But Hunt said he talked to one of the sand castle promoters almost as a lark and asked if they could get married on it.

"Fantastic. It's romantic," Allard's 19-year-old daughter,
Shari Hibbs, said as she watched her mother and Hunt exchange

The giant sand castle was built as the centerpiece for a festival of concerts, contests and light shows held on Treasure Island, located on Florida's Gulf Coast.

Variety of gadgets can help visually impaired

SACRAMENTO — An array of gadgets using the latest in electronic, computer, and laser controls has been developed over the last decade with the promise of making life easier for those who are visually impaired.

The new technology ranges from computer systems that deliver speech and Braille printers to talking machinery that will balance a check book. Here are some of the new possibilities:

• A computer that reads out loud, and announces the information displayed on a personal computer screen. VERT systems, manufactured by Telesensory System Inc., also enables the blind to do their own computer-programming, wordprocessing, data-processing, and data retrieval.

A talking calculator, the first marketed on a worldwide basis, also is offered by TSI.

 Programs such as the VersaBraille II System, which allows the blind to use Braille for their computer work, but receives and transmits information in print. A printer developed by Ohtsuki Communication Products will print regular type and Braille on parallel lines.

A one-piece portable electronic magnifier, called the Voyager, that can enlarge reading material up to 45 times.

Manufactured by VTEK, a zoom-lens video camera displays the enlarged images on a screen.

A processor that enables the blind to read computerscreen characters. It has a window that not only displays printed information in Braille, it also maintains a screen format of lines and columns that enable the user to read spreadsheets and numerical data.

• Tites that can be inlaid in sidewalks to alert the visually impaired that they have reached a street corner. Manufactured by Guidance Systems Inc., these "Pathfinders" have been installed in at least two locations in Sacramento.

Library Service for the Blind was reduced by $1.45 million March

That means that in the next six months the service will record 100 fewer books on cassettes, and translate 110 fewer titles into Braille, according to Donine Hedrick, program manager for of the Braille and talking-book library in California.

Since each original copy is reproduced for thousands of local libraries, the cut means there will be 80,000 fewer cassettes available nationally—10,000 of which would have been available in California, Hedrick said.

She also said a ceiling has been placed on the number of subscriptions for Braille or recorded magazines that her library will have available. "On a monthly basis we get about 200 new patrons, and those will not be able to get magazines unless someone currently getting them dies or drops their subscriptions," she said.

Richmond strongly supports Braille and talking-book programs, although it one of the two had to be eliminated, he would keep the talking books.

"Dollar for dollar, I think it is one of the most useful and beneficial programs in existence," he said. "Dollar for dollar, it is probably the best program going, and I would hate to see anything happen to it.

"It's really valuable to students who use it as a resource library to do reports or term papers," he said. "It's valuable for a lot of people from a mental-health standpoint. It keeps them in touch with public affairs. It allows them to be current and up-to-date. It provides a vitally needed link between the homebound, who use it as their main source of entertainment and information.

Carol Gilbert, field services librarian for California State Library for the blind, agreed. "We have more tapes and records than we have books in Braille, even now, because most of our patrons suffer from agerelated blindness, and a lot of them don't read Braille," she said

"The older you are, the less sensitivity you have in your fingers," Gilbert added.

Richmond said there is also a strong possibility that special library services for the visually impaired will be severely curtailed or eliminated under the federal Gramm-Rudman budget-cutting legislation.

CuraCare mobile van provides mammographies

By Suzanne Sproul

Lisa Fabian is trying to eliminate some of the fear most women feel when a mammography is mentioned.

A mammography is the most accurate tool available for the early detection of breast disease, particularly cancer, Fabian said.

Fabian is the supervisor of the CuraCare mobile van That provides breast imaging services — mammographies and sultrasound exams.

The van goes to different hospitals and clinics throughout Southern California. Ontario Community Hospital contracts the van's services twice a week.

"The very mention of mammography or breast cancer is mentally stressful for most women, even if there isn't a lump, "Fabian said.

According to literature provided to patients in the van, one out of 11 American women will develop breast cancer — the leading cause of cancer death among women in this country for the past 35 years.

Only women who have been referred by personal physicians are examined in the van. The mammography and ultrasound exams each take about half an hour.

Fabian said she first tries to put a woman at ease when she comes for an appointment. The woman watches a 13-minute film about breast self-examinations.

And then, depending upon a woman's personal health, family medical history and age, she either undergoes a mammogram or an ultrasound exam.

Mammograms, she said, involve a very small amount of adiation.

The American Cancer Society suggests that women 35. Years and older have a baseline mammogram. Women between the ages of 40 and 50 years old should have them every two years after the initial exam.

"All women have lumps in their breasts. Most are cysts or are benign, but if a woman is concerned she should have it checked. No one knows more about your body than yourself," Fabian said.

She said a recent cancer society campaign to provide less expensive mammograms served 30,000 Southern California women.

R.C. cultural task force pledges support for Wignall

By Marianne Aiken

Support for Chaffey College's Rex W. Wignall Museum is on the priority list of a task force studying the cultural needs of Rancho Cucamonga.

"We do recommend continued support for the Wignall Museum because it's very different and the only one we have in Rancho Cucamonga," agreed task force chairman Don Hardy.

The Chaffey College governing board is also eager to keep the museum open, said interim Superintendent/President Otto Roemmich

A $60,000-$70,000 funding package for the museum is being considered in the college's 1986-87 budget, Roemmich said

"We'll probably take something to the board at our May meeting or our June meeting," Roemmich said.

The task force recommendations, completed April 28, include these other top cultural priorities: expanded library services

a performing arts center art displays in public places historical archives. The recommendations of the 20-member task force are all tied to the creation of a non-profit foundation to finance the improvements, said Sandie Oerly, a task force member and a member of the Alta Loma School

An in-depth study to indicate the market for a local theater for the performing arts is also recommended, as well as trying to get developers to plan room for public displays of sculpture,

The task force is asking that the city consider using a 2.6-acre area southeast of the proposed new civic center at Haven Avenue and Foothill Boulevard for a performing arts center, Hardy said

The task force also identified the 99-acre park north of Base Line Road between Milliken Avenue and the Deer Creek Channel as a possible spot for a new library.

Hardy said he envisions it as a multi-use building that would not only house the library, but include meeting rooms and areas for arts and crafts, and a place to perform plays.

"We recommend it to start as a library and build into multipurpose use mainly for Rancho Cucamonga residents," Hardy said.

Locations in private and government buildings would be good sites for art displays, the task force said.

"We'd like to have more exposure to the arts on a free basis," Hardy said.

The task force recommendations will be passed on to the city council, but Assistant City Manager Bob Rizzo was unable to say when they would appear on the agenda.

AIDS patients show improvement upon usage of new drug therapy

Though not a cure, the drug azidothymidine (AZT) is the first therapy to partially repair the damaged defense systems of AIDS victims.

Fifteen of 19 AIDS patients who got the drug at the National Cancer Institute, Bethesda, Md., and Duke University Medical Center, Durham, N.C., have improved, researchers say.

'We have no evidence that AZT is a cure for AIDS," said Dr. Robert Yarchoan of NCI. "But some patients are showing some improvement."

Importantly, AZT is one of those rare drugs that can seek out and kill an AIDS virus that is attacking the brain.

AZT prevents the AIDS virus from reproducing and gives the defense system a chance to recover,

A new X-ray technique that provides better pictures of the heart has been developed at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn.

By taking continuous, but very speedy X-ray images, Mayo physicians are monitoring the insertion of tiny tubes (catheters) that diagnose or treat heart illnesses. And the technique reduces Xray exposure by 30 to 50 percent, cardiologist David Holmes says in this month's Mayo Clinic

Mayo began using the technique in March 1985 and it now is being introduced by many other medical centers.

Shingles, the painful blisters believed caused by chicken pox virus, also may be an early sign of AIDS, researchers at New York University Medical

Led by Dr. Alvin Friedman-Kien, the NYU scientists have found eight patients in which shingles was an early warning sign of AIDS. All eight AIDS patients were homosexual or bisexual Alerted by this discovery, the NYU researchers checked 300 other AIDS sufferers and discovered 8 percent got shingles before their AIDS was definitely diagnosed.

There is no conclusive evidence linking sugar and hyperactive children, University of Iowa pediatrician Mark Wolraich says.

In an address to the American Academy of Pediatrics annual meeting, Wolraich said hyperactivity has several causes - the child's home and school environments, personality makeup, and self-image.

'There's no clear pattern of association between sugar and hyperactivity," he said. "Parents who restrict their child's sugar intake probably won't tone down their child's activity.

Young gets job offer at Chaffey

By Marianne Aiken

Jerry Young, president of Centralia College in Centralia, Wash., has been offered a threeyear contract as the next president of Chaffey College.

"I'm very excited about it." Young said when contacted by telephone Monday morning. Young said he found out about his selection Friday evening. "I wasn't expecting it," he said. "I was gratified it was over. It's been a long process

Young said he was first contacted about the position during the week of March 17. He is tentatively scheduled to take the helm July 1, but will first make a trip to the Alta Loma campus to work out his contract.

A five-member team visited Young in Centralia last Monday, and another finalist, Henry Kirk of Pasadena Community College, last Wednesday. governing board President Isabel Scully said.

Young was selected out of a field of four. A fifth candidate. Dan Moriarty, president of Triton College in the western suburbs of Chicago, III., dropped out of the race to accept another job

Young has been president of Centralia College for the past three years, where he said he battled serious budget problems brought on by the lumberdependent economy of the Pacific Northwest.

Young said he was eager to visit the campus.

Primarily, what I want to do is get there, meet the staff, talk with them, and get some type of assessment about what the priorities are, and begin working on those," he said.

Scully said the selection was made by a screening committee that was involved in the process from the start.

'We were very pleased with the entire process," Scully said. "It was one in which everybody had a chance to participate.'

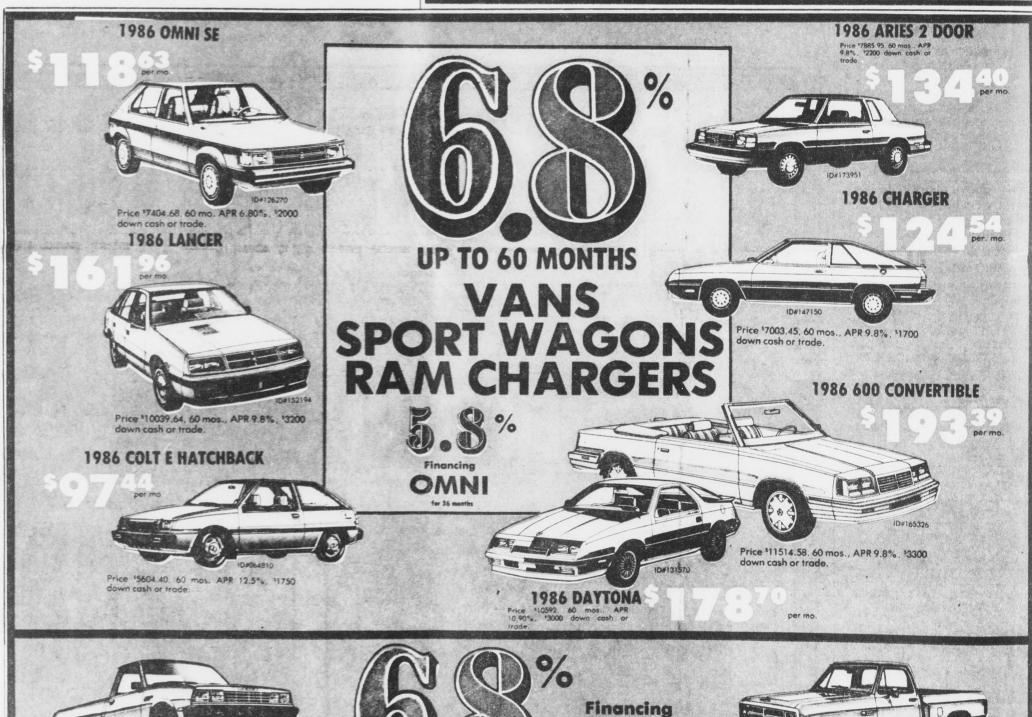

Young will replace interim Superintendent/President Otto Roemmich, who has been filling in since last July, when former President Samuel Ferguson was
